This book has a lot of information. It starts off with general information, but as a lifelong camping fan, a lot of the equipment listed as "essential" is actually rarely used, if ever. You would also need a large cargo trailer to carry it all. While I personally wouldn't haul a Dutch oven to go camping for a weekend (too heavy, too bulky) dutch oven cookery is fun in longer term camps, as well as in the backyard. The grilling recipes give directions for preparing the items at home, then transporting them to be cooked while camping. All of the recipes would be great additions to backyard cooking as well. Almost all of them can also be prepared easily in your own kitchen at home. While this book is a "cooking with kids" title, it really isn't all that kid oriented in terms of younger kids actually helping. It's mostly regular recipes like would be used for family meals. It is a good addition to expand your repertoire of meals for camping.

Cooking in the great outdoors adds more flavor to everything you cook. This cookbook has great information and recipes for living in the great outdoors. Starting with dutch oven recipes and ending with campfire desserts. Thank you and enjoy your time out and enjoy your day.

This book is not like just any other recipe book that you might have, it has some of the most sought-after camping recipes, easy and delicious. I would definitely have each and every recipe tried at least once before I pick a favorite. Good work.

Not geared for kids to use for cooking; parental supervision is required. I loved the introduction to the book about camping in general. It makes everyone aware that there is more to make at a campfire other than hot dogs and hamburgers.

We like to have a variety of meals when camping. Now we will have a lot more choices. Loved the banana recipes!

I have enjoyed these recipes that Debbie Madson has provided for us. Kids will love these. I don't just use these for camping, many of the recipes are great meals at home.

Good cookbook. But nothing new, nothing really jumped out at me.

Can't wait for camping season
